Hello,

While inherently I don't think a candy tax is a bad idea, I think exempting candy with flour in it is a very odd approach. Just because there is flour in a candy, it does not give it any extra nutritional value, nor does it provide and real form of sustenance. I think if the candy tax were to stay in place it would make more sense to exempt products with nuts in them, or just tax all candy.

I also think it would be great to put an exemption on products made in Washington. I know there are a lot of small and/or local candy makers in our state, and I think it would be fantastic to encourage people to buy locally.

Thanks!
