- D. Provide an alternative method for making "same day" payments if an electronic funds transfer fails.
- E. Provide that if a due date falls on a legal banking holiday in a member state, the taxes are due to that state on the next succeeding business day.
- F. Require that any data that accompanies a remittance be formatted using uniform tax type and payment type codes approved by the governing board.
- G. Adopt a standardized transmission process approved by the governing board that allows for the remittance in a single electronic transmission of a single (bulk) payment for taxes reported on multiple SERs by affiliated entities, certified service providers or preparers. Each state shall comply with this provision no later than two years after the governing board approves such a standardized transmission process.
- H. A member state requiring remittances prior to the return due date must comply with the provisions of subsection I and may not require more than i) two additional remittances for returns due on a monthly basis or ii) one additional remittance per month for returns due less frequently.
- I. 1. For returns filed monthly, additional remittances may only be required of sellers or purchasers that had a sales and use tax liability of more than $30,000 in the member state during the preceding calendar year.
2. A member state that requires a person to make two additional remittances for a month shall require i) only one additional remittance that is due on a date other than the date that a monthly return is due, and (ii) one additional remittance that is due on the same date that the return for the prior month is due, which additional remittance shall be filed as a part of the return for the prior month.

3. A member state that requires a person to make one or two additional remittances shall allow that person the option of making any additional remittances at the same time and as a part of the prior month's return. For returns not due on a monthly basis, this provision only applies to the month when both an additional remittance and a return is due.

States may require that a person shall not change methodologies without first providing the state with a 90-day notice.

This provision does not prevent the imposition of penalty or interest associated with a person's failure to timely make an additional remittance, file a return or pay the tax due with the return.
 - b. A member state may not require a person who elects to make an additional remittance based on the actual tax due to remit an amount that exceeds the amount owed through the remittance date, less any prior remittances made for the return period.
 - c. The calculation method(s) authorized by a member state must be based on a methodology reasonably believed to determine the approximate amount of tax due that does not exceed the tax owed through the remittance date, less any prior remittances made for the return period. The calculation method(s) authorized by a member state shall include using the liability for the same reporting period in the prior year (if the taxpayer was in operation at that time). Using that methodology, a member state may provide a person with the amount of the additional remittance the person must make.
5. For timely filed and paid returns, a member state requiring additional remittances shall use the following procedures to address overpayments resulting from additional remittances:
 - a. The member state shall automatically, on a consistent basis, either:
 - i. Issue a refund (which business processes of the state will normally have the refund issued within 30 days from the due date of the return); or
 - ii. Allow the person with the overpayment to apply the overpayment to the next return or required remittance. However, upon request and subject to verification, the member state shall issue a refund if it is unlikely the overpayment will be fully applied to tax liability due for the next three months.
 - b. Nothing in subsection I prohibits a state from offsetting the refund of an overpayment as authorized by the state's law.
6. An additional remittance shall not require the filing of an additional return.

Every state requiring additional remittances shall conform to the amendment in subsection H and I of this section by July 1, 2013.
